“O earth, I will befriend thee.”
-W.S.
Welcome to Chicago Shakespeare and the continuation of our city’s landmark international arts festival—Shakespeare 400 Chicago. Today’s production of Othello has been woven into a psychological thriller—one that could have only come from the brilliant mind of British director, Jonathan Munby. Jonathan was last with us for his visceral interpretation of Julius Caesar in 2012, which astutely reflected the power of political rhetoric in an important election year for the US. His Othello artfully mines the themes of jealousy and racism inherent in this play, and poignant at this moment in our world’s history.

Shakespeare 400 Chicago will complement Munby’s Othello staged at Chicago Shakespeare by exploring the same play through: dance in the Hamburg Ballet’s awe-inspiring interpretation at the Harris Theater for Music and Dance; hip-hop in the internationally acclaimed adaptation Othello: The Remix by rap artists the Q Brothers; and even through a Brazilian-inspired dish designed by Chef John Manion of La Sirena Clandestina, part of Culinary Complete Works.

These are just a few examples of the myriad ways Shakespeare’s thirty-eight plays will be brought to life across our city this year. We are proud to spearhead this initiative that reaffirms Chicago’s position as a global destination for cultural tourism. Your support fuels this work, and for this we are truly grateful.

Here’s to a year of Shakespeare!

This spring, CST’s ever-popular annual 75-minute production for student and family audiences is Short Shakespeare! Twelfth Night, the first time that this comedy of shipwrecked twins and a triangle of unrequited love has been abridged by CST. Adapting and directing the work is CST’s longtime collaborator, Kirsten Kelly. A co-founder of CST’s CPS Shakespeare! program—engaging CPS students and teachers in creating and performing their own adaptation of the Bard’s work—this will be the second Short Shakespeare! production that Kelly has directed. After a five-week run in the Courtyard Theater, the show will hit the road for a tour of schools across the Midwest, engaging thousands of students in Shakespeare’s work.

Uniting scholars from ten universities, City Desk 400 is a true 21st-century expression of Shakespearean scholarship. Throughout the year, academics from across the state—from the University of Chicago and Northwestern University to University of Illinois at its Urbana-Champaign campus—will respond online to the remarkable body of artistic work encompassed by Shakespeare 400 Chicago in essays that illuminate Shakespeare’s work as living, ever-changing scripts. Their collective responses will form a permanent archive for the festival, and allow the scope of work shown in Chicago in 2016 to be celebrated worldwide. Audiences can follow the discussion by subscribing to the feed online at citydesk.shakespeare400chicago.com.

For over a decade, Chicago Shakespeare’s World’s Stage Series has imported leading international artists to Chicago and sent our own work out to festivals across Africa, Asia, Europe and the Middle East. In 2016, Shakespeare 400 Chicago builds on this legacy of global producing, which promotes exploration of the canon by a breadth of cultures. Chicago, in fact, will host the most diverse festival across cultures and artistic disciplines, as the world commemorates the 400-year legacy of Shakespeare this year. Launched recently by four-star productions from Russia and Belarus, and continuing on to work from Australia, Belgium, China, Germany, India, the UK and beyond—Shakespeare 400 Chicago is as global as the world-class city we call home.

The tastiest facet of Shakespeare 400 Chicago, Culinary Complete Works presents a bold intersection of the Bard and the gastronomic world, pioneered by Chicago restaurateur and sommelier Alpana Singh with CST’s Creative Producer Rick Boynton, and featuring thirty-eight chefs inspired by Shakespeare’s thirty-eight plays. “Culinary Complete Works allows Chicago to experience Shakespeare’s canon in such a unique way, especially with our diverse line-up of talented Chicago chefs,” explains Singh. “Everyone has a connection to Shakespeare—from studying Romeo and Juliet in high school or seeing Macbeth live for the first time as an adult—and our culinary community is thrilled to create inspired, personal dishes to celebrate the Bard’s 400 years of timeless works.” To learn more about where you can taste their dishes, visit shakespeare400chicago.com/culinary.

THE STORY

In the city street shadows, two men discuss the night’s intel: Othello, a hired general in the Venetian army—and a Moor—has eloped with a young aristocrat of Venice, named Desdemona. Iago, the soldier, reassures Roderigo that all hope of winning the young woman’s heart is not yet lost; that he, too, harbors reasons for hating the Moor, who has promoted over him Cassio, a young and privileged officer. From the street below, Iago and Roderigo yell the news of Desdemona’s elopement to awaken her father Brabantio, who immediately seeks the full justice of Venetian law. But this night the Duke and senators are intent upon more pressing affairs of state: the Turks threaten Venetian interests in Cyprus, and the Moor’s service is required. Othello prepares to deploy to Cyprus and, with the Duke’s permission, Desdemona will join him there, attended by Iago’s wife Emilia.

Now Iago conceives his plan: he will make Othello believe that his new lieutenant is Desdemona’s lover. And so begins his work. First ensnaring Cassio in a drunken brawl, Iago looks on as Othello predictably dismisses the officer from his service. Iago urges Cassio to seek Desdemona’s aid in recovering the general’s favor—while suggesting to Othello that her interest in a man’s misfortunes might signal a wife’s infidelity. Demanding proof, Othello is convinced when his first gift to Desdemona—an embroidered handkerchief belonging once to his mother—is misplaced and now passes, with guidance, to Cassio, then into the possession of a Cypriot prostitute named Bianca.

For his service, Iago is appointed Othello’s new lieutenant. Desdemona, stunned by her husband’s accusations, pleads with him—first for compassion, then for her life. And as Emilia comes to understand her own husband, two women become caught inextricably in the crossfire.

ITS ORIGINS

Many of Shakespeare’s later plays, including Othello, interweave stories from familiar folk tales and myth with contemporary Elizabethan topics. The primary source for the story appears to have been an Italian 1565 collection of tales, Hecatommithi by Giovanni Battista Giraldi, known as Cinthio, also the source for Shakespeare’s Measure for Measure. Cinthio seems to have drawn his inspiration from one of the tales from One Thousand and One Nights. Only Desdemona is named in Cinthio’s telling, and Shakespeare changed the killing of Desdemona from a murder designed to seem accidental to an intimate, personal act.

IN PRINT

Most scholars date the composition in 1603 or 1604, but Othello did not appear in print until 1622 when it was first published as a quarto, a small volume comparable to a modern paperback. It was included a year later in the First Folio—the first collection of Shakespeare’s plays printed in 1623, seven years after his death. The significant differences between the Quarto and Folio texts have led scholars to attribute them to different theatrical manuscripts. Desdemona’s willow song, for example (foregrounded in this production by Director Jonathan Munby), appears for the first time in the Folio edition. Approximately eighty percent of the text is written in verse, the remaining twenty percent in prose.

IN PERFORMANCE

The first record of a performance appears in the Revels Accounts for the court of King James I on November 1, 1604. When Othello was first performed at the Globe Theatre, Richard Burbage, one of Shakespeare’s leading actors, played the title role. In the 1660s when women were first allowed to perform on the English stage, the role of Desdemona was the first to be played by a professional actress. The Victorians did not want to see a cruel or sensual Othello; all allusions to sex were cut from the text, and Othello’s foreignness downplayed. In America, a more violent portrayal was given by Edwin Booth, the famous actor-brother of John Wilkes Booth. In the nineteenth century Ira Aldridge, the American grandson of a Senegalese chieftain, was the first African American to play Othello, but the actor was prohibited from performing the role in the US; instead, Aldridge played Othello, among many other roles, in the great theaters of Europe. Nearly a century later, Paul Robeson, too, was forbidden to appear on the American stage as Othello, and so, like Aldridge, Robeson went to England. Not until 1942, after an extensive public relations campaign and an exhaustive search for a white actress who would agree to play Desdemona, was Robeson able to perform the title role in the US. More than twenty film and television versions and adaptations have been made, notably Orson Welles’ The Tragedy of Othello: The Moor of Venice, and Oliver Parker’s 1995 film feature film adaptation starring Kenneth Branagh and Laurence Fishburne, the first African American to portray Othello in a major film. Artistic Director Barbara Gaines first staged Othello at Chicago Shakespeare Theater in 1995. Since then CST has produced the play under the direction of Marti Maraden (2008) and in the Q Brothers’ hip-hop adaptation, Othello: The Remix, first staged in 2012 and returning to the theater Upstairs at Chicago Shakespeare in spring 2016.

Unhoused

ut that I love the gentle Desdemona, / I would not my unhoused free condition / Put into circumscription and confine / For the sea’s worth.”

What does it mean to feel “at home”? To have a place in society? And what does race have to do with place? Shakespeare’s most domestic tragedy takes up these issues by showing what is at stake in the marriage between a white Venetian woman and a black immigrant military hero converted from Islam.

The first scene in Othello makes “home” central to its exploration of “the green-eyed monster” jealousy, as Othello oddly describes his loss of bachelorhood as the state of being “housed.” He announces himself as someone whose place in society is outside of it, unhoused, in temporary tents used in military crusades. Beneath the veneer of the old ball-and-chain complaint about marriage, we discover the depth of Othello’s anxiety about how to locate himself. Described as a “wheeling stranger of here and everywhere,” he finds marriage a sure way to assimilate, to provide a durable place in the world.

And yet the tragedy of the play turns on the inequality of the dream of belonging. Othello opens with Iago clamoring to Desdemona’s father in the night: “Awake, Brabantio! Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags! . . . your daughter and the Moor are making the beast with two backs.” In his prejudicial view, daughters are material goods, and Othello and Desdemona’s marriage, a pornographic bestial melding. Guarding the house means protecting a particular idea of family. As Mercutio’s curse upon the Capulets and Montagues suggests in Romeo and Juliet, the “house” is more than a physical structure; for it signifies lineage, community, and family.

The striking irony posed by the opening marriage is that Brabantio disowns his daughter just as Othello is joining a supposedly stable family. Shakespeare hits this point home by including a lengthy discussion about where the exiled Desdemona will live once Othello goes to war. As Othello houses himself in the solid affiliation she offers, Desdemona becomes a wandering stranger of here and everywhere. Such is the art of the first act of Othello where the stakes of marriage, identity and belonging are conveyed by reference to the social meaning of home.

The eerie fascination of the play rests in part on Iago’s success in getting Othello to see himself as an outsider. Othello was the first black tragic hero on the English stage, appearing at a time when England started to invest in the African slave trade. As a black man, he exists on the margins of culture. So when Othello says of Desdemona, “When I love thee not, chaos is come again” (with chaos, for a Renaissance audience, being the ultimate nothingness), we understand the stakes of fidelity for him.

Incited into jealousy by Iago, Othello begins to see his own skin as a sign of his degradation: “My name, that was as fresh / As Dian’s visage, / is now begrimed and black / As mine own face,” he declares. Othello begins to view his own marriage as unnatural and out of place. The logical extreme of this view culminates in Othello’s final poignant suicide speech, where he splits into two identities: the insider Christian hero and outsider enemy. In his final moments, Othello imaginatively converts the violence of the bedroom into a remote battlefield in the Middle East. Attempting to prove himself a war hero (rather than a wife-killer), Othello ends up alienating himself as the stranger-infidel he has so courageously fought.

Othello is perhaps Shakespeare’s most anti-theatrical play, the text that most graphically portrays the devastating effect of believing in a reality shaped by words, performances and images—by what one character calls “false gazing.” In making Othello conjure tortuous mental images of his wife as adulterous (and crediting these illusions as true), Iago becomes the consummate playwright, actor, and director—someone able to weave an alternate reality for those around him. He transforms a mundane and domestic stage prop—a handkerchief—into “ocular proof” of infidelity. He uses illusions to estrange the familiar.

Yet with some poetic justice, the handkerchief is the one smoking gun that unravels Iago’s web of fictions and reveals the truth at the conclusion. Disclosing Iago’s manipulation of the handkerchief, Emilia—Desdemona’s maid and Iago’s wife—emerges as the play’s unexpected hero. Standing defiantly by the dead Desdemona, she calls for justice even at the threat of death. How does Shakespeare present her heroism? As a new and improved vision of domesticity. When Iago commands, “I charge you get you home,” Emilia boldly declares, “Perchance, Iago, I will ne’er go home.”

Not only has the household ceased to function ethically and socially, but its dream of inclusion is shown to be especially dangerous for women and racial outsiders.

In a play whose first act meditates on the role of home for establishing kinship and social place, the final scene shows a wife refusing home as a place vulnerable to poisonous fantasies. Not only has the household ceased to function ethically and socially, but its dream of inclusion is shown to be especially dangerous for women and racial outsiders. Belonging, being housed, having a place: Othello brilliantly uncovers the fragility of these desires in a world where home is as illusory as theater.

Individual Contributors

Thanks to the contributions of CST’s family of donors, we can continue to delight audiences in Chicago and around the world through our trademark approach to theater that is inspired by the spirit of Shakespeare. Annual donations offset the substantial expense of producing theater of uncompromising quality and ambition. In recognition of the enhanced level of support provided by our Bard Circle donors of $1,000 or more, CST provides exclusive privileges and behind-the-scenes access.

Reflects gifts received between July 1, 2014 and January 21, 2016.

GALA 2016 is the landmark celebration of the yearlong festival Shakespeare 400 Chicago. Funds raised at this incredible event will directly support our festival programming aimed to ensure that Shakespeare is celebrated across communities and throughout classrooms. This includes Chicago Shakespeare in the Parks, which will tour a professional production—free for all—to 18 culturally underserved neighborhoods across Chicago; Battle of the Bard, a slam-style showcase designed to build community and celebrate Shakespeare’s language through performance; and Team Shakespeare, the Theater’s nationally acclaimed education programs that engage more than 40,000 students and teachers annually through live performance and intensive literacy programs.

For more information, please call Sam Ostrowski at 312.667.4947, email sostrowski@chicagoshakes.com, or visit www.pjhchicago.com/event/cst
