“O earth, I will befriend thee.”
—W.S.
On the heels of our citywide, international festival, Shakespeare 400 Chicago, Chicago Shakespeare Theater isn’t settling down any time soon. This spring, we’re bursting at the seams.

Developed through the Theater’s new play initiative, the world premiere production, The Book of Joseph, shares the Hollander family’s story of love and redemption. Shakespeare’s charming comedy, Love’s Labor’s Lost, reunites Chicago audiences with the directorial genius of Marti Maraden—the former artistic director of Canada’s Stratford Festival. And, throughout the spring, Short Shakespeare! Romeo and Juliet, Chicago Shakespeare’s abridged production of the beloved tale of star-crossed lovers, will perform for 40,000 students both on Navy Pier and on tour across the Midwest. This range of work is emblematic of our 30th Anniversary Season: a bold collection of inspiring productions, all driven by the ambitious spirit of Shakespeare.

Beyond our stages, we have a revolutionary expansion underway. You may have noticed construction next door as you entered the Theater today. In a matter of months, we will unveil our new performance space to Chicago and the world—The Yard at Chicago Shakespeare. A theater like no other, The Yard will house mobile seating “towers” that create dynamic theatrical configurations ranging from 150 to 850 seats. As a complement to our existing two theaters, this new indoor performance venue will offer the leading theater artists of the world a state-of-the-imagination venue that will inspire bold interpretations of classical texts, musicals and family programming. It will also bring our audiences a great array of international programs and more service to students each season.

We hope you enjoy the production today, and that we see you back soon for this special 30th Anniversary Season!
CHICAGO SHAKESPEARE THEATER

CST is a global theatrical force, known for vibrant productions that reflect Shakespeare’s genius for storytelling, language and empathy for the human condition. Throughout 2016, CST spearheaded the international arts and culture festival, Shakespeare 400 Chicago, a yearlong, citywide celebration of the playwright’s 400-year legacy. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Barbara Gaines and Executive Director Criss Henderson, CST is dedicated to creating extraordinary productions of classics, new works and family programming; to unlocking Shakespeare’s work for educators and students; and to serving as Chicago’s cultural ambassador through its World’s Stage Series. CST serves as a partner in literacy to Chicago Public Schools, working alongside English teachers to help struggling readers connect with Shakespeare in the classroom. His words are brought to life on stage for 40,000 students from across the Midwest every year. Each summer, 30,000 families and audience members of all ages welcome the free Chicago Shakespeare in the Parks tour into their neighborhoods across the far north, west and south sides of the city. Reflecting the global city it calls home, CST is the leading producer of international work in Chicago, and has toured its plays to Africa, Asia, Australia, Europe, Canada/North America and the Middle East.

CST is proud to take an active role in empowering the next generation of literate, engaged cultural champions and creative minds. The Theater’s tradition of excellence and civic leadership has been honored with numerous national and international awards, including the Regional Theatre Tony Award, three Laurence Olivier Awards and eighty-five Joseph Jefferson Awards. CST’s work with Chicago Public School students and teachers was recognized by the White House in 2014 with the National Arts and Humanities Youth Program Award. Among its many international engagements, CST participated in the Royal Shakespeare Company’s 2006 Complete Works Festival and was selected to represent North America at the Globe to Globe festival as part of London’s 2012 Cultural Olympiad.

Beginning April 15, the Oscar-winning romantic comedy about the rough-and-tumble life of a young William Shakespeare and his Chamberlain's Men, Shakespeare in Love, returns to its rightful home—the stage. Based on the screenplay by the accomplished playwright Tom Stoppard and Mark Norman, this adaptation immerses the audience in the playwright’s everyday world—imagining the unexpected people and places that inspired one of the greatest love stories of all time. After a successful production on London’s West End, this highly anticipated Chicago premiere will be staged by multiple Jeff Award-winner and Chicago Shakespeare favorite Rachel Rockwell, who most recently had a celebrated run of Ride the Cyclone at the MCC Theater in New York.

After its five-week run for student and family audiences at Chicago Shakespeare’s home on Navy Pier this winter, Short Shakespeare! Romeo and Juliet will set out in April for another five weeks—this time on tour to urban, suburban and rural schools across the Midwest. The Short Shakespeare! tour, comprised of a cast of thirteen, a tour manager and a crew of seven, expands the impact of the Theater’s education program by bringing professional productions directly into schools as a dynamic complement to classroom study. These tours extend the reach of the education program to students not able to make a field trip to Theater in Chicago. All told, the student abridgment of Romeo and Juliet will serve 40,000 students at the theater and at twenty-five area schools this spring.

Following a year of celebration citywide, Shakespeare 400 Chicago is now part of Chicago’s cultural history. Over 1.1 million people participated in 863 events, presented by 60 partner organizations across 231 locations in the city. Performers from twelve countries visited Chicago to present Shakespeare’s work in eleven languages, traveling 116,112 miles—almost six times the circumference of the globe—to get here. Shakespeare 400 Chicago shined a spotlight on how Chicago Shakespeare’s “resident” playwright’s work resonates with modern art-makers and audiences alike. While this landmark year has concluded, Chicago Shakespeare Theater’s spirit of innovation and the community partnerships that fueled the festival will continue to grow for years to come.

In an effort to make its facility and performances accessible to all patrons, Chicago Shakespeare Theater developed its “Access Shakespeare” program. These Access performances feature touch tours, American Sign Language interpretation, open captioning and audio description. If you are interested in, or know of someone whose experience at Chicago Shakespeare would be enhanced by these services, visit www.chicagoshakes.com/access to learn more. Under the leadership of Jason Harrington in the Education Department and Rachael Swann in Guest Services, Chicago Shakespeare now provides services to patrons with disabilities at more performances, including a wider variety of productions, than ever before.
Developing New Works

As Chicago Shakespeare’s Creative Producer, I have the privilege of honoring the genius of our eponymous playwright by supporting and developing the work of audacious and brilliant living writers. Whether a hip-hop adaptation of Shakespeare’s Othello, a musical retelling of a classic Jane Austen novel or a new play exploring untold family secrets through a treasure trove of swastika-stamped letters, CST embraces the varied challenges of bringing a myriad of stories to theatrical life.

As with The Book of Joseph, our process often starts with a commission, where we engage a writer to create the play and then support that creative process through a series of developmental readings, workshops and residencies. Throughout, I have the opportunity to develop an intimate relationship with the piece, working closely with the playwright and often the director to provide an objective eye and to ask key questions about dramaturgy—in other words, how the story unfolds, and how the characters find their voice in the telling of it. As the project evolves, we surround the process with other artists—designers, directors, performers—who help illuminate that dramaturgy, and we guide resources where they can be most helpful in the realization of the writer’s vision.

Bringing a play to production on our stage is an important step in CST’s commitment to the work, but beyond our initial production we champion the future life of each piece, leveraging our network of relationships in hopes of identifying the show’s next step. Most recently, both Ride the Cyclone and Othello: The Remix finished critically acclaimed runs off-Broadway, and our musical adaptation Sense and Sensibility moved to The Old Globe in San Diego under Barbara Gaines’s exquisite direction.

You, our audience, are a key partner in the development of new work like this, the world premiere of Karen Hartman’s The Book of Joseph, a project we’ve supported and nurtured over the last four years. As a play that engages with a history now nearly seventy years old, it contains extraordinary contemporary resonance. It is that opportunity to always be expanding and exploring our dialogue with you that gives me the greatest thrill in my work.

Thank you for being with us, and we look forward to seeing you at the Theater again.

Rick Boynton
Creative Producer
Chicago Shakespeare’s home on Navy Pier is expanding in exciting ways. Just outside our doors, a crescent-shape structure is taking shape—connecting our existing two theaters to a third, innovative, year-round, performance venue, The Yard.

With its innovative, flexible seating configurations, this new theatrical platform can adapt to a wide range of artistic visions, with the potential to surprise patrons on every visit.

Our three-theater campus will enable us to offer more productions, extend runs of successful shows and double our service to students.

Underneath the existing white tent, The Yard is currently being enclosed with steel and the fully-enclosed roof is coming together.

Meanwhile, a six-inch layer of concrete is being poured on top of the steel deck and that forms The Yard’s floor.

A Conversation with Richard Hollander and Barbara Gaines

Artistic Director Barbara Gaines and Richard Hollander, whose family story is brought to the stage in this world premiere, discuss The Book of Joseph.

Why was—and is—the telling of your family’s story so imperative to you? What about the sharing of this story matters?

Richard Hollander: To me, the word is legacy. Nothing is more important to me than to leave my children and grandchildren memories and values. The Book of Joseph memorializes family memories and is all about instilling values.

Barbara Gaines: Theater is all about telling stories. It’s been about telling stories since humans could communicate through words. The chaos of normal life is put into a kind of order through theater, and the chaos of life can weave itself into art. The grief of many people is woven into art, and so it helps all of us.

For each of you, what is the single most important idea that you want audiences to keep thinking about after seeing the Hollander family’s story? (And has that “big idea” shifted for you along the way?)

RH: The briefcase I discovered in my parents’ attic was very real. The briefcase is also a powerful metaphor. Every family and every person has stories and unresolved issues that have been intentionally or unintentionally locked away. Hopefully, the play will inspire the audience to open their “briefcases.”

BG: There are so many lessons to be learned—about family life and silences, about having the courage to excavate not only your family’s interior landscape but also your own. Telling a story can free you from the burden of that story.

The moment that you opened the suitcase, what did you feel? What did you imagine?

RH: One does not have to read Polish or German to know the contents of the letters. I only had to look at the swastikas stamped on the envelopes to know the letters were from a family I never knew. I couldn’t help but see a parallel between my father having lost his family in war and the violent and simultaneous deaths of my parents.

What have you learned about your family that you didn’t know? About yourself?

RH: It is gratifying, reassuring, and comforting when one’s image and assumptions about parents are reinforced. All the letters and documentation of my father’s life before I was born validated the extraordinary qualities I always believed he possessed. The passionate words exchanged between my parents confirmed everything I knew about their marriage.

Telling a story can free you from the burden of that story.

Richard, in the letter you wrote to our audiences, you used the word “boundaries” to refer to the experience between generations. Can you say more about that word, and why it carries such meaning for you?

RH: One of the themes in The Book of Joseph concerns deception between father and son—the questions never asked and the answers never given. Unlike the customary use of deception, this deception between father and son was based on mutual love. Parent and child were protecting the emotions of the other. Those boundaries were only broken upon the discovery of the briefcase.
BG: One of the great lessons we learn from the Hollanders is that only through transparency can we have more empathy, to stop judging others and feel for them. When those boundaries are broken down, when you can step over that line—into empathy—that’s what empathy is, isn’t it? It’s a true submersion into the other person’s pain or life. It’s rare.

How did a quote from your grandmother’s letter, “every day lasts a year” become your book’s title?

RH: That one phrase transports me to the ghetto in Kraków. Her words depict the excruciating passage of time waiting for the food that may not come; for exit visas that never arrive; for that inevitable and frightful pounding on the door by Nazi stormtroopers—the wait for rescue and salvation.

What difference has the process of living in this story made to each of you?

RH: I feel connected to a family that perished. I feel an overwhelming sense of pride in my father. And, I am far better able to place life’s daily annoyances and issues in perspective.

BG: I’ve come to understand that our ancestors are so much closer to us than we think. Getting to know the people who perished in this family, it was impossible not to fall in love with them—with all the frailties of all of our families, all the petty annoyances, all those things that happen around a family table over a lifetime. I don’t know if I’ve ever before felt so close to my ancestors whom I’ve never met. My family has been here in America for many, many years, and I don’t know anything about the people who first came here, generations before me. In the Hollanders’ letters, they become so real, so human, and it’s impossible not to transfer that feeling to my relatives, to all those people generations back that I would like to say thank you to. Thank you for whatever journey you were on. Through all your sacrifices, through your spirit of adventure, through your pain, through your successes, that’s why I am here now.

US WARTIME IMMIGRATION

In the late 1930s and early 1940s as waves of people fled Nazi-occupied Europe, the United States government had no established refugee policy. Instead, the US was operating on immigration quotas set in 1924 that did not reflect the influx of immigrants due to the changing political landscape—and resulted in thousands of refugees being kept on waiting lists. Further complicating matters, in 1931 President Herbert Hoover issued a mandate that the country would accept only those immigrants who could prove that they would not be a “public charge,” or otherwise burden society—an order disqualifying all but the wealthiest of refugees. Such isolationist rhetoric, along with widespread fear resulting from the Great Depression, developed strong anti-immigration sentiments among the American populace.

As Nazi Germany became a greater threat to America and it was evident that the nation would soon be at war, the government feared that spies and saboteurs would enter the country disguised as refugees. As a result, it became all but impossible for refugees to enter the country. It was not until 1944 that President Franklin Delano Roosevelt—under intense pressure from cabinet secretaries, Jewish leaders and First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt—founded the War Refugee Board to begin addressing the immigration crisis facing a world ravaged by conflict.

OCCUPATION OF KRAKÓW

Kraków, Poland has been home to Jewish residents since the early thirteenth century. By the time of the 1931 Census (as reported in 1936)—the last before the outbreak of War World II—Jews accounted for approximately one quarter of the city’s total population. Following the invasion of western Poland by Nazi forces in September 1939, approximately 20,000 additional Jews flocked from the countryside to Kraków in hopes of finding safety. Under the occupation, Jews were used as forced labor for public duties such as street sweeping and garbage collection. Wealthier families were able to pay fees to avoid such tasks, but were forced still to distinguish themselves with armbands and badges, register all property and assets and adhere to strict travel restrictions and curfews. By late October, most of Poland, including Kraków, was under Nazi rule.

The Nazi government established a Jewish ghetto in March 1941—not in the centuries-old Jewish Quarter of Kraków, but along the railroad tracks to the south of the city center. The approximately 15,000 Jews allowed to remain in the city were forced to move in to the newly established ghetto and an estimated 3,000 rooms; roughly four families were assigned to each apartment.

Once relocated, Jews were forbidden to travel beyond the concrete and barbed wire barriers demarcating the ghetto, and were forced to work in factories manufacturing products for the Third Reich. This urban labor regime expanded to include labor camps on the outskirts of town; where families were separated and forced to work in fields, quarries and textile plants. Two years after the Kraków Ghetto’s establishment, Nazi commanders ordered its liquidation. By March 1943, the estimated 10,000 residents who remained in the ghetto had been executed in the streets, or transported to nearby labor camps or death centers.

WHAT IS REAL?

The Kraków letters, court transcripts and the elderly Arnold Spitzman’s language are excerpted directly from documentary material. The Kraków letters are published in Everyday Lasts a Year, edited by Christopher Browning, Richard Hollander and Nechama Tec.

Performed as play in our still-new century, the letters bridge a gap in time as well as space—from their then to our now. Such temporal crossings, from the present to the past, are always difficult, always incomplete; in the case of the Holocaust, they can seem almost impossible. The numbers alone can numb us—how can we now know what all these dead once knew?

The Book of Joseph, to its enormous credit, tugs hard at this tough question. While Richard Hollander, our wholly American “host” and narrator, celebrates with filial devotion his father Joseph’s astonishing accomplishments, Richard’s sharp son Craig, a history major addicted to archives, questions everything, weighing what little we learn from the letters against the much that we still don’t know of the family’s larger story. For Richard, feeling the cost of the catastrophe is almost everything; for Craig, knowing its intricate history matters more. And in this conversational conflict between father and son—a newer, gentler instance of the Hollander family’s propensity for wholeness and sundering—the playwright mirrors our own difficulties as audience looking back upon the Holocaust at a remove of seven decades: how to grasp, and how to respond to, actions so horrific and losses so immense.

While inhabiting the problem, this play-composed-of-letters also proffers itself as partial solution. Letters, Richard declares at the outset, are “time made manifest.” Plays are too—and like letters, they manifest time most vividly by their devotion to the present tense. Writing from Kraków, the Holladers framed their every letter to the painful urgencies of the present moment—to what they were enduring now. Plays do the present tense a different way, by means of convergent, palpable presence: the bodies of the actors and the audience, occupying the same space, breathing the same air, hearing and speaking the same words, for the same stretch of time. Today, or tonight, on Navy Pier, what happened in Kraków generations ago will, in the words and actions of the Hollanders and the performers who play them, happen again, right here right now.

The story told in The Book of Joseph is simple, true and fraught with loss. In Kraków, Poland, 1939, Joseph Hollander—Jewish, enterprising and alert to the approaching storm of hate and death—arranges a swift departure to safer places for himself and his large, loved family: mother, sisters, in-laws, nieces. But they decline to leave, calmly convinced that (to echo a novel published three years earlier an ocean away) it can’t happen here. Only Joseph knows it can. They stay; he leaves, intent on securing their escape somewhere down the line.

Then there’s a second story, without which we would have far less access to the first. Baltimore, Maryland, 1986: in the wake of Joseph’s death, his adoring grown son Richard finds a briefcase full of letters postmarked from Poland, stamped with swastikas, dating from the early 1940s, written by the Hollanders, under deepening duress, to the their cherished, distant son, now dwelling precariously in America and still trying like hell to get them out.

Entwining these two stories, from the middle and the end of the twentieth century, The Book of Joseph documents the Hollander family’s wholeness and its sunderings. Letters like these index intimacy and distance both at once. If the writers and the reader did not matter so deeply to each other, the letters would not have been written; had the family been all secured in the same place, their interactions would have dissolved in talk, not survived as ink on paper. And because Joseph’s letters have not survived, those in the briefcase travel all one way: a family’s communal attempt, tender and tormented, to bridge the gap between their here and his there.

Letters, Richard declares at the outset, are ‘time made manifest.’

Plays are too...
But if plays and letters traffic extensively in the present tense, they deal also, more quietly, in the tensile present—in the ways the present moment is always stretching, via our desires and anxieties, towards the imagined future. In the Hollander’s letters, as in many others, worries about what comes next can sometimes crowd the present off the page. In plays, too, we are always guessing at what comes next, only to have our expectations confirmed or denied a few scenes down the line. In this way the theater, as Aristotle long ago implied, affords to mortal gazers a vivid, invaluable, rehearsal for the reality we must return to once the play is done.

In 2017, the realities we return to will be exceptionally rigorous. For a map of our present moment we might go back to an older story of another Joseph, the hero at the end of Genesis who (like the hero of our present Book) is forced out of his homeland, only to prosper in a new one. In one of the story’s most striking motifs, Joseph’s spectacular career turns out to be grounded entirely in empathy: for his Egyptian master Potiphar, whom he will not betray; for the Pharaoh whose dreams he productively interprets, to the benefit of all; and for the suffering brothers who once left him for dead, and whom he now welcomes into his new homeland, where the abundance (all that well-stored grain) is in effect of his own making. Yet even the Biblical Joseph’s extraordinary empathy is not sufficient to forestall the cataclysm, generations later, when his descendants in Egypt, newly tyrannized by a subsequent Pharaoh, embark upon their Exodus.

The upshot: oppression and emigration have never stopped; pained propulsion has for too long formed part of the human condition.

In 2017, when exodus and the tyrannies that trigger it are transpiring among many peoples across the globe, and empathy seems suddenly in short supply, the theater will function as one among our innumerable, necessary resources for its replenishment: as a space—at once safe and unsettling—in which to foster a ferocious, productive, even disruptive empathy for others, at home and afar, immured or on the run. In the end, Richard and Craig Hollander are both right: all that we know, and all that we feel, will serve as our chief cues for all that we must do, as we exit the theater into a new now, a fraught, tensile present in which it seems, at least for the moment, that anything may happen here.
Community Partners

Chicago Shakespeare Theater is honored by the support of these leading business and civic partners, whose generosity demonstrates a commitment to enriching our vibrant Chicago community.
