When we first imagined The Yard at Chicago Shakespeare and the artistic capacity inherent in its flexible design, we hoped that this new venue would invite artists to dream big as they approached Shakespeare's work. Every theateermaker involved in today’s production of Macbeth, from co-directors Aaron Posner and Teller to our incomparable design team and distinguished cast, has embraced the dynamic nature of this state-of-the-imagination theater. The result is an astonishing psychological thriller that will keep you rapt from beginning to end, bursting with a suspenseful soundscape, magic-infused weird sisters, and a theatrical volume that envelops you in a world of blinding ambition.

Macbeth is the fifth production of The Yard’s inaugural season. Complementing work in our Courtyard and Upstairs theaters, since its opening in September 2017 our third venue has hosted international imports from France and Mexico; a hip-hop holiday classic developed by our new work initiative; an abridged staging of a Shakespearean comedy for tens of thousands of students; and now, an epic production of the Scottish play. For each production in this line-up, the theater has shifted configurations to best serve the vision of our artists and the audience’s relationship to the work on stage. Ranging from an intimate cabaret theater to today’s larger proscenium stage, The Yard has delivered on its promise to be one of the most flexible theaters in the world.

As we look ahead to next season, celebrating our move to Navy Pier twenty years ago, we are so grateful for audience members like you who, by engaging in our work, have allowed this home for Shakespeare to evolve into a world-class theatrical center. Our promise to you is a three-theater complex bursting with vibrant productions of Shakespeare, new work that bears his artistic genius, international imports that showcase the leading artists of the world, and education programs that will impact generations to come. The future is bright with you at our side. And we can’t wait to see what lies ahead!
Chicago Shakespeare Theater (CST) believes that Shakespeare speaks to everyone. A global theatrical force, CST is known for vibrant productions that reflect Shakespeare’s genius for storytelling, musicality of language, and empathy for the human condition. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Barbara Gaines and Executive Director Criss Henderson, Chicago Shakespeare has redefined what a great American Shakespeare theater can be—a company that, delighting in the unexpected, defies theatrical category. A Regional Tony Award-winning theater, CST produces acclaimed plays at its home on Navy Pier, throughout Chicago’s schools and neighborhoods, and on stages around the world. In 2017, the Theater unveiled its third year-round venue, The Yard at Chicago Shakespeare, with an innovative design that has changed the shape of theater-making. Together with the Jentes Family Courtyard Theater and the Thoma Theater Upstairs at Chicago Shakespeare, The Yard positions CST as the city’s most versatile performing arts venue.

Chicago Shakespeare’s year-round season features as many as twenty productions and 650 performances—including plays, musicals, world premieres, and visiting international presentations—to engage a broad, multigenerational audience of 225,000 community members. Recognized in 2014 in a White House ceremony hosted by First Lady Michelle Obama, CST’s education programs support literacy and creativity for 40,000 students each year. Each summer, 30,000 family audiences welcome the free Chicago Shakespeare in the Parks tour into their neighborhoods across the far north, west, and south sides of the city. The Theater is the leading producer of international work in Chicago and, touring its own plays across North America and abroad to Africa, Asia, Australia, Europe, and the Middle East, CST has garnered multiple accolades, including the prestigious Laurence Olivier Award. Emblematic of its role as a global theater, CST spearheaded Shakespeare 400 Chicago, a yearlong international arts and culture festival, which engaged an estimated 1.1 million people through 863 events at 231 locations across the city in 2016—all in celebration of Shakespeare’s 400-year legacy.

Naming a seat in Chicago Shakespeare’s beloved Courtyard Theater offers donors the chance to leave a permanent, lasting mark on all that the Theater has accomplished over the last 30 years—and all that is to be discovered in the years ahead.

The 2018/19 Season promises to inspire and entertain. This fall, enjoy the American premiere of Nell Gwynn, the song-and-dance-filled tale of a king’s mistress, which debuted at Shakespeare’s Globe. Joe Dowling returns to reimagine his acclaimed A Midsummer Night’s Dream from the Theater’s inaugural Navy Pier season. The National Theatre of Great Britain visits with their lauded thriller An Inspector Calls. Twenty years after her award-winning Hamlet, Barbara Gaines returns to Shakespeare’s most enigmatic character. Spring 2019 brings the highly anticipated world premiere musical Bedknobs and Broomsticks, based on the iconic feature film. Q Brothers Christmas Carol returns for the holidays, and a host of artists from around the world fill the Theater’s stages. Season Ticket packages, designed for every taste, schedule, and budget, are now on sale: www.chicagoshakes.com/season.

The success of CST’s model for developing and premiering new work continues this season with the national theater landscape with the 2018 Seattle premiere of Brooke Maxwell and Jacob Richmond’s musical Ride the Cyclone. Developed at CST from a cabaret-style concert into a fully realized musical under the guidance of Creative Producer Rick Boynton and the direction of Rachel Rockwell in 2015, Cyclone quickly moved to the East Coast, premiering off Broadway in 2016. This spring, it has also delighted audiences on the West Coast in a co-production between The 5th Avenue Theatre and ACT in Seattle. Now CST’s artistic team turns its attention to the world premiere, opening here, of Brian Hill and Neil Bartram’s new musical adaptation of the Disney film Bedknobs and Broomsticks, set for production in The Yard next May.

Since moving to Navy Pier nearly 20 years ago, Chicago Shakespeare has evolved into a robust, three-theater center, with expanded capacity to embrace the diversity of programming and the vibrant productions you have come to expect on our stages. Innovation and flexibility power The Yard at Chicago Shakespeare, where nine mobile audience towers can be configured in a variety of shapes and sizes, accommodating between 150 and 850 patrons. The unique architecture of our 500-seat Courtyard Theater was inspired by theaters in early modern England, and evokes the design of Shakespeare’s Globe and the Royal Shakespeare Company’s Swan Theatre. In its intimate setting, the black-box theater Upstairs at Chicago Shakespeare is an adaptable performance space, providing a blank canvas for artists’ imagination. Together, these three performance venues suit the creative choices of our artistic team with practically limitless versatility—and amplify our role as a world-class institution for generations to come.

A Conversation with the Directors

Directors Aaron Posner and Teller spoke with members of the Chicago Shakespeare staff as they prepared for rehearsals to begin.

CST: You two have shared a unique artistic partnership working together on Shakespeare, for years now.

AARON POSNER: It’s been one of the great theatrical experiences of my life getting to do these two shows—The Tempest and Macbeth—with Teller over the last ten years. We are very different people with very different careers, very different outlooks—and very different tastes in movies—but we are both totally populists at heart. Accessibility and engagement for everybody has shaped both of our careers, and hopefully that will come through in this production, as well.

But the truth is, our differences are our strength as a team: I have a fairly chaotic mind, where Teller’s is extremely well-ordered and systematic. Teller drills down to the center of the dramaturgical events in the story, and then begins to dream what those moments might be in magical terms, using his own (and Johnny Thompson’s) encyclopedic knowledge of all of magic history—and I’m not exaggerating in saying that. Then, after that kind of unbounded imagination follows the meticulous, detailed nature that magic requires, which is so unforgiving, so pass/fail. You can’t have a magic trick that almost works.

TELLER: Though in magic, we often do get away with arbitrary movements and arbitrary gestures, and the audience buys it. But Aaron won’t let me get away with that, and it strengthens the magic enormously. Aaron insists that it’s all motivated by the actors, so when you get to that magic trick, it’s cubed in its effect because you’ve woven it in dramaturgically to be part of that world.

POSNER: The brush sizes you use in magic and directing are very different. When I’m directing a play, I have to use a roller, or a wide brush, and maybe occasionally a smaller brush, as it were. We have maybe two-and-a-half hours to stage, and don’t have time to do it all like a Seurat painting, one point at a time. But that three-second magic trick has to be that meticulous in detail. So the two of us learning from each other about what size brush we’re painting with at any given moment has been very much part our process collaboration over the years.

Teller, you’re a magician. How did you first get hooked on Shakespeare?

TELLER: My first contact with Shakespeare was when my grandfather gave us a complete set of the plays. And my father, who knew I was interested in magic, said, ‘There are witches in Macbeth!’ and I went, ‘Where? Where?’ We found the Act 4, scene 1 ‘Cauldron Scene,’ whereupon I proceeded to memorize it. When you’ve memorized a poem, you own it for the rest of your life. I fell in love with that scene before anything else in Shakespeare. It’s the language, but it’s also that his language carries with it the ideas.

In Macbeth, what language carries the play’s central ideas for this production?

POSNER: ‘Nothing is but what is not,’ and ‘Fair is foul and foul is fair.’ What’s illusion and what’s real? Those lines have shaped our entire approach into this production.

We are both totally populists at heart. Accessibility and engagement for everybody has shaped both of our careers.

Our audience still talks about your production of The Tempest that the two of you co-directed here. How much will your Macbeth remind us that the same two artists are behind it?

TELLER: It’s not going to be The Tempest—The Tempest was a comedy. But what these two stories do have in common is that they’re both about situations where reality seems fluid. You could apply that same phrase from Macbeth to The Tempest: ‘Nothing is but what is not.’ Magic is appropriate to both plays because it’s helpful to put the audience into the same emotional position that these characters are to their world. The Macbeths are subject to illusions and hallucinations. They mistake what the reality of the situation is, and think that they can take the witches’ prophecies as straight information. Prospero on Nobody dies in The Tempest; everybody dies in Macbeth. It’s a different world.

POSNER: Half the magic, twice the plot. It’s a visceral, psychological, supernatural horror thriller.

TELLER: There’s no real danger in The Tempest. Prospero’s biggest trick is the shipwreck; he’s using magic to create the illusion of danger and death. His ability to conjure illusions is his strongest weapon. In Macbeth, illusions—both visual and verbal—lead to knives and murder. Nobody dies in The Tempest; everybody dies in Macbeth. It’s a different world. Even in its day, The Tempest was a different kind of show altogether: it was a pageant, more like a musical. The Tempest is not plot-driven the way Macbeth is. Macbeth is a bite-your-fingernails suspense yarn about a guy ‘just like you’—who happens to get caught by these strange circumstances and gets snarled in this web of evil.

This is, of course, your first experience working in The Yard. What role has its unique architecture played in shaping your world for this production?

POSNER: It’s an amazing, inspiring space that makes you lift up your eyes and chest and energy when you just walk into it. It has a strange strength, and a kind of wonderful majesty to it. The scenic design for the show wanted to take full advantage of that. So in addition to an odd kind of indescribable abandoned gothic castle in woods, we have this area far above the stage we refer to as ‘Hell Above,’ or ‘Hell’s Attic.’ It is where our percussionist, Hecate, played by the amazing Ronnie Malley, and the witches, or Weird Sisters, will hang out during most of the show, messing with the poor mortals going about their awful business below. We’ve tried to build the show to truly fit and fully inhabit The Yard. It is an honor to be the first large-scale show produced in this incredible venue, and we are all doing our best every day to be deserving of the opportunity—and to create a rip-roaring thriller that folks will talk about for a while to come.

TELLER: The elegance and classical nature of the Courtyard Theater, and the rough, raw, majestic, heart-beating, foot-stomping capacity of The Yard are so different. The set design, the musical choices, the idea of Hell’s Attic, from which our Weird Sisters and their demon percussionist ally, Hecate, look down at the world of human folly, all came out of a sense of scale that The Yard’s space demands, and that you want to fulfill.

THE STORY OF MACBETH

The Weird Sisters await Macbeth and Banquo as the two warriors, victorious from battle, return home. On the heath, they greet the two men with strange prophecies: Macbeth will be the Thane of Cawdor and King, but it will be Banquo who fathers Scotland’s future royal line. Soon the men hear word that the first part of the prophecy is now true: the treasonous Cawdor is to be executed, and Macbeth’s bravery earns him the new title from the grateful king, Duncan.

Learning of Duncan’s visit to their castle, Lady Macbeth presses her husband to take destiny into his own hands; the next morning, the king’s bloody body is discovered in his bed. Fearful for their lives, Duncan’s sons flee and Macbeth is crowned king. Among Scotland’s warriors, Macduff decides that he does not trust and will not follow the new king.

Macbeth cannot stop thinking about the Weird Sisters’ last prophecy: it will be Banquo, not he, who fathers Scotland’s royal lineage. Macbeth hires henchmen to slaughter Banquo and his son Fleance, but the boy escapes. At their coronation banquet that evening, the ghost of Banquo appears before a guilty king.

Tortured by his fears, Macbeth seeks out the three Weird Sisters once more, and, once more, mistakes their cryptic prophecies as assurance of success. Their paths covered in blood, Lady Macbeth is tormented into madness as Macbeth leads his country toward the abyss of civil war. And the Weird Sisters’ prophecies prove true, each more dark and dire than the last.

ITS ORIGINS

Shakespeare’s Macbeth is drawn largely from two stories in Raphael Holinshed’s history, Chronicles of England, Scotland, and Ireland, revised and reprinted in 1587: one of King Duncan and the usurper Macbeth (b. 1005); the other of King Duff, slain by Donwald with the help of Donwald’s ambitious wife. Six centuries later, after the death of Elizabeth I, Scotland’s King James VI ascends to England’s throne in 1603 as James I—claiming himself a descendant to Banquo, the man who Shakespeare’s Weird Sisters prophesize will father England’s future line of kings.

IN PRINT

Scholars are fairly certain that Macbeth was first performed in 1606, soon after the great Gunpowder Plot of 1605, when revolutionaries attempted to overthrow the new government of King James I. The first published text of Macbeth appeared with the first Folio in 1623—printed seven years after Shakespeare’s death. There is evidence in the first Folio text (as in a number of Shakespeare’s other plays) of the work of collaborators, and indeed portions of the witches’ scenes are attributed to one of Shakespeare’s contemporaries, Thomas Middleton.

IN PERFORMANCE

Macbeth is a play shrouded in mystery and superstition so rife that, to this day, some fear uttering its name in the theater. In 1660 with the end of the Commonwealth and the reopening of London’s theaters, an adaptation (penned by Shakespeare’s godson William Davenant) elevated the honorable Macduff to the play’s central character; his godson’s script ousted Shakespeare’s Macbeth from the stage for nearly a century.

Seminal productions have since included Orson Welles’ all-black production of Macbeth in 1936—known as the “voodoo” Macbeth—set in nineteenth-century colonial Haiti. Trevor Nunn’s celebrated 1976 production by the Royal Shakespeare Company, with Ian McKellen and Judi Dench, was staged within a small chalk circle, signaling the play’s demonic associations. Macbeth played on Broadway in 2008, with Patrick Stewart in the title role. The play has inspired many television and film adaptations, including Akira Kurosawa’s Throne of Blood (1957) set in medieval Japan, as well as gangster movies, like Joe Macbeth (1955) and Men of Respect (1991).

Chicago Shakespeare Theater first staged Macbeth in 1992, starring Kevin Gudahl in the title role and directed by the Theater’s first international director, Roman Polak. Macbeth returned to CST’s mainstage in 2008, staged by Artistic Director Barbara Gaines, starring Ben Carlson and Karen Aldridge. The play has been staged in three CST WorldStage adaptations: Kabuki Lady Macbeth, starring Barbara Robertson; Marionette Macbeth, with Italy’s venerable marionette company Carlo Colla e Figli; and, as part of Shakespeare 400 Chicago’s yearlong festival in 2016, a concert version from Belgium’s Theater Zuidpool. CST presented MacHomer, a one-man version of The Simpsons performing Macbeth, created and performed by Rick Miller in 2006. In addition to a number of abridged productions for student and family audiences over Chicago Shakespeare’s history, Posner and Teller’s staging will be the Theater’s third full-length production of Macbeth.

Spring 2018 | Macbeth

sift quickly through an almost automatic sequence of impressions. Our first conviction about the effect—that it’s impossible—confronts the counterfact that we’ve just witnessed it, and promptly bifurcates into two alternate explanations: the effect is possible, if you can allow for supernatural causes deployed by the magician channeling them. Or, alternatively, the effect is possible if you accept the performer as a merely human agent, enacting ingenuities that you’re scrambling frantically to figure out (“How did he do that?”).

As denizens of the twenty-first century we tend overwhelmingly toward the second option. But Shakespeare’s first audiences were more open-minded. Watching Macbeth in 1606, they dwelt on the very edge of a cultural cusp between the belief in active, effectual fairies, witches, warlocks, angels, and magi that had suffused the centuries past, and the streamlined commitment to purely natural explanation that would emerge half a century hence in the Scientific Revolution, whose founding father, Sir Francis Bacon, was setting forth its grounding arguments (while also not writing Shakespeare’s plays) during this very decade.

In plays centered on ghosts and wonders (Hamlet and The Tempest come to mind), Shakespeare deliberately fosters a buzz-generating debate as to which explanation—the natural or the supernatural—should hold sway, among playgoers who were themselves the multi-headed manifestation of a deeply seated, richly doubled cultural world-view.

Magic arises from the illimitable mysteries of cause and effect; to witness the effect is to surmise the cause. Shakespeare makes of this double-consciousness in Macbeth the stuff of mighty theater, compounding it to the point where ordinary stage magic becomes visceral horror. His audiences, for example, were long accustomed to watching dramatic night scenes unfold in broad daylight: the “wooden O” of the Globe theater opened out on to the sky; all performances took place in early afternoon; the often intense “darkness” of the night scenes derived from language, not from lighting. —

In Macbeth, the witches’ most famous lines are a rhyming couplet in which doubling runs rampant:

Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.

Clearly, they are speaking their spell over their strange brew. But it’s hard to work out what those first two words are doing there. Are they merely incantatory, hypnotic—sounds Shakespeare has chosen to produce a quadruple rhyme (two doubles, a trouble and a bubble) by couplet’s end?

Or do the doubles work more specifically, as imperatives by which the witches urge each other on: double your toil, double your trouble, and double down on both again, quadrupling our effort so that we can set this cauldron seething. A watched pot, the proverb says, never boils; the Sisters’ spell decrees that this witched pot will.

What’s in the cauldron is a potent recipe (“Eye of newt and toe of frog ...”) from whose grisly ingredients, later in the scene, the Sisters will conjure speaking illusions to at once alarm and assuage Macbeth: floating head, bloodied infant, magic mirror.

What’s in the incantation—that doubled doubling—may provide the clue to a larger magic: the illusionist tactics, the deliberate doubling of audience experience and thought, which here and elsewhere remains one of the core tactics by which Shakespeare makes his theater mesh with magic.

Magic arises from the illimitable mysteries of cause and effect; to witness the effect is to surmise the cause. Whenever we watch a truly dazzling trick, we are momentarily immobilized by wonder, even as our minds

In plays centered on ghosts and wonders (Hamlet and The Tempest come to mind), Shakespeare deliberately fosters a buzz-generating debate as to which explanation—the natural or the supernatural—should hold sway, among playgoers who were themselves the multi-headed manifestation of a deeply seated, richly doubled cultural world-view.

Magic arises from the illimitable mysteries of cause and effect; to witness the effect is to surmise the cause. Whenever we watch a truly dazzling trick, we are momentarily immobilized by wonder, even as our minds
In Macbeth, Shakespeare doubles down on this effect, and plays it out across a wild range of resonances. Night seeps in from every corner of the play; the language of darkness clusters so thick that its auditors could not help but register, and even savor, their entrenchment in a doubled consciousness—brightness in their actual eyes; darkness in their minds—and the flip-trick of causation (words, not photons) that continually reenacts this bifurcation. The play’s famous paradoxical pairings render the effect even more pervasive, as when, for example, the witches’ mysterious first incantation—“Fair is foul and foul is fair”—mutates two scenes later into Macbeth’s very first spoken line: “So fair and foul a day I have not seen.” And Lady Macbeth, in her formidable first soliloquy, will soon be echoing the witches also, without ever hearing or meeting them.

In those subliminal “transmissions” gleams a hint of the play’s core question. What makes the Macbeths do what they do? Is it their own appetites and ambitions? That would be the “natural,” human-agency answer. Or is it the witches’ scripting—in which case they may operate as supernatural playwrights and directors of this inexorable tragedy?

As the brilliant Oxford Shakespearean Emma Smith has argued, Macbeth poses this question at every turn, and never answers it. Instead, Shakespeare floats it over this audience like a hypnotic, immobilizing spell. When Macbeth first hears the witches’ prophesies, he confesses, in soliloquy, that they have stunned him to a standstill. Under the spell of the murder he might enact, he finds that his “function[s]” (thought, word, action) are now so “smothered in surmise / That nothing is but what is not.”

That, of course, is the effect of watching a great magic act. Or a great play. Macbeth manages to weave, out of its endless artful doublings, a single, stupendous conjuring trick, designed to induce in its audience the same trance—wonderstruck, horrific—endured by its protagonists.

“Abracadabra,” goes the hokey incantation—to which a silly love song of the 1980s added the fun half-rhyme, “I want to reach out and grab ya.” True enough. That is what magicians hope to do. And that’s what theater does too. ■

Shakespeare Society

Members of the Shakespeare Society provide vital annual support to sustain Chicago Shakespeare Theater’s mission. The commitment of these steadfast individuals helped to build a home for Shakespeare in Chicago that has endured for the past three decades. We are deeply grateful for their extraordinary investment in the Theater’s guiding principles to serve as a cultural leader, citizen, and ambassador for our city.

Individual Contributors

Thanks to the contributions of CST’s family of donors, we can continue to delight audiences in Chicago and around the world through our trademark approach to theater that is inspired by the spirit of Shakespeare. Annual donations offset the substantial expense of producing theater of uncompromising quality and ambition. In recognition of the enhanced level of support provided by our Bard Circle donors of $1,000 or more, CST provides exclusive privileges and behind-the-scenes access.
