About CST

Under the leadership of Artistic Director Barbara Gaines and Executive Director Criss Henderson, Chicago Shakespeare has redefined what a great American Shakespeare theater can be—a company that defies theatrical category. This Regional Tony Award-winning theater’s year-round season features as many as twenty productions and 650 performances—including plays, musicals, world premieres, family programming, and presentations from around the globe. The work is enjoyed by 225,000 audience members annually, with one in four under the age of eighteen. Chicago Shakespeare is the city’s leading presenter of international work, and in touring its own productions across five continents has garnered multiple accolades, including the prestigious Laurence Olivier Award. Emblematic of its role as a global theater, the company spearheaded Shakespeare 400 Chicago, celebrating Shakespeare’s legacy in a citywide, yearlong international arts and culture festival, which engaged more than one million people. The Theater’s nationally acclaimed arts in literacy programs support the work of English and drama teachers, and bring Shakespeare to life on stage for tens of thousands of their students each school year. Over the summer, the company tours a professional production of Shakespeare’s work, free for all, to neighborhood parks across the city. In 2017 the Theater unveiled The Yard at Chicago Shakespeare—with its innovative design that has changed the shape of theater architecture. Together with the Jentes Family Courtyard Theater and the Thoma Theater Upstairs, The Yard positions Chicago Shakespeare as the city’s most versatile performing arts center.

Welcome

DEAR FRIENDS,

We have long wanted to introduce Chicago audiences to Paul Gordon’s delicious romantic comedy Emma, a musical based on the beloved Jane Austen classic. Paul’s work was last seen on our stage in 2015 with the world premiere musical of Austen’s Sense and Sensibility—also directed by Barbara Gaines. Each of these stories explores the evolution of strong female protagonists, whose complicated navigation of a world where roles are prescribed by gender and class, leads to self-reflection, growth, and the embrace of authentic love. Austen’s final work published during her lifetime, Emma has been translated into many film adaptations; we hope you’ll find this musical adaptation equally provocative and entertaining.

All of us at Chicago Shakespeare are honored to provide an artistic home to generative artists of our time, like Emma’s award-winning composer and lyricist Paul Gordon. Our new work development program is helmed by Creative Producer Rick Boynton and has commissioned, developed, and premiered a broad range of new plays and musicals since its inception. 2020 marks an important milestone for this work, as we celebrate the March Broadway opening of the new musical SIX, penned by Toby Marlow and Lucy Moss, which had its North American premiere at Chicago Shakespeare in 2019.

Your patronage supports this work—our ability to reimagine Shakespeare, premiere new plays and musicals, and serve as a global ambassador for Chicago by importing international artists to Chicago and touring our work across the world. In the months ahead, whether you join us in New York to celebrate the Queens of SIX on Broadway, here in Chicago for the return of the Royal Shakespeare Company with The Taming of the Shrew, or a new Beatles-infused As You Like It closing out our season, please know how grateful we are for your belief in our mission and trust in our artistic collective.

Love blooms in the forest for many of the characters in Shakespeare's As You Like It, but never before quite like this. Fueled by the “all you need is love” energy of 1960s counterculture, adapter/director Daryl Cloran’s high-spirited production infuses Shakespeare’s romantic comedy with the hit songs of The Beatles. Cloran—renowned across Canada for his work at Citadel Theatre, Shaw Festival, National Arts Centre, and beyond—lifts Shakespeare’s timeless verse in beautiful harmony with the immortal music of the “Fab Four,” seamlessly weaving in over 20 songs, performed live, including “She Loves You,” “I Want to Hold Your Hand,” “Let It Be,” and “Here Comes the Sun.” This joy-filled production begins performances April 30 in the Courtyard Theater, setting the stage for a crowd-pleasing summer of love in Chicago.

Meet Kassandra Lozoya, a first-year teacher at Collins Academy High School, on the city’s southwest side. Kassandra is part of this year’s Sheldon and Bobbi Zabel Bard Core program—a yearlong professional development seminar for high school English teachers in Chicago Public Schools. This widely acclaimed adolescent literacy program focuses on innovative ways to approach some of the curriculum’s most challenging texts through drama-based strategies. When Kassandra was a CPS student at Foreman High School on the city’s north side, she vividly recalls her own teacher, Nicky Shoffer, returning from Bard Core to practice new strategies with her students. Kassandra is now one of a growing number of “second-generation” Bard Core teachers—a program that over the past sixteen years has served more than 350 teachers in classrooms across our city.

When the Royal Shakespeare Company’s cast of The Taming of the Shrew takes the stage in The Yard at Chicago Shakespeare this spring, they will be dressed in lavish costumes of lush fabrics and elaborate ruffs. And from the start, you will notice something different—there are more women than men on stage. Director Justin Audibert has set this production in a world where women hold the power. “We’ve flipped the rules of Shakespeare’s contemporary world,” says Audibert. By reversing the traditional gender of each role, the RSC company creates a new environment in which the power structures of today can be explored through a 400-year-old text. Audibert’s take resonated deeply with UK audiences, and London’s The Times declares it “deftly provocative and exuberantly entertaining.” The RSC’s limited, three-week engagement begins April 15.

American Theatre Magazine has named Associate Producer Aislinn Frantz to the list of “Chicago Theatre Workers You Should Know.” Prior to joining Chicago Shakespeare Theater in 2018, Frantz was associate producer at the Eugene O’Neill Theater Center, senior agent in the literary division of Brett Adams, Ltd., and has presented at Actors Theatre of Louisville’s renowned Humana Festival. Now, alongside Creative Producer Rick Boynton and the entire CST artistic team, she serves a pivotal role in guiding the creative work onstage, from concept to closing. Dramaturg Ramona Rose King shared, “Aislinn is first and foremost invested in the story being told and the people telling it... The care she brings to relationships with artists and colleagues makes her special.”

In plotting out a musical, the first thing I always ask myself is: do these characters sing? And really, why do we want to hear them sing, even if they do? To the second question, I will simply say that art is subjective and we all have our particular tastes. But the first question to me is more interesting. I’ve seen many a musical where I was thoroughly convinced that the answer to that question was a resounding “no.”

When I first considered turning Emma into a musical, I pondered the idea carefully before running to the piano. Having seen several film versions and read the novel, I wanted to make sure it had an inherently musical ethos simply beyond being a “period piece.” It soon became apparent that not only did these characters sing, but they sang quite effortlessly.

Jane Austen’s brilliant comedy provides the perfect bedrock for a musical. In Emma Woodhouse we have a protagonist who can’t help but be completely mistaken on almost every point, and yet through Austen’s penetrating humor she remains surprisingly sympathetic to the reader. Musicalizing her felt natural, and Austen’s biting wit and intelligence lend themselves quite naturally to lyric writing.

The makeover of Harriet Smith, Emma’s devoted protégé, was also ripe with musical possibility. Her affection for the lowly farmer, Robert Martin, was superbly appealing for creating repeating motifs that would somehow imply the innocence of love and thread Emma’s continued wrongheadedness about her friend’s future.

Of course, the Knightley-Emma relationship was the most appealing aspect of all. Here you have Austen creating truly one of the first romantic comedies in literature. She shapes the kind of banter that would later be emulated by Hepburn and Tracy, and paved the way for Woody Allen’s Annie Hall, Nora Ephron’s When Harry Met Sally and countless other films to follow in the same genre. (Yes, there was Beatrice and Benedict, but Knightley and Emma have their own unique charm and are as contemporary today as they were in the early nineteenth century when Jane Austen conjured them up.)

When I started to create the score I didn’t necessarily determine in advance what style the music would be written in. I mostly let the story guide me, and I tried to take my cues from the characters themselves. It all felt quite natural. What has emerged, I hope, is a sound tinged with my early influences: Lennon and McCartney (leaning towards George Martin’s alluring strings to “Eleanor Rigby”) and of course the amazing Stephen Sondheim who, simply by listening to his genius, has taught me everything I know about writing for the theater.

But of course my first and main collaborator is Jane Austen. I don’t take lightly the presumptuousness of my assuming a partnership with her. And since she can’t be here to scold me on the creative liberties I have taken, I must leave that to our audiences and our critics. All I can say is that the production you see today is truly a labor of love, for Jane Austen and for the characters she has created. And as to whether or not these characters sing: perhaps they will let you know themselves.

THE STORY

Emma Woodhouse, rich, beautiful, and supremely confident in her own matchmaking abilities, mourns the loss of her former governess and dearest companion—now married, thanks to Emma, to Mr. Weston. To cheer herself up, Emma resolves to now focus on another match, despite the protestations of her father and a close family friend, Mr. Knightley.

The young Harriet Smith will be the perfect match for the town’s most eligible bachelor, Mr. Elton, the vicar. Emma persuades Harriet to refuse local farmer Robert Martin’s proposal, despite the young woman’s deep feelings for him. Furious at Emma’s arrogance, Mr. Knightley views Mr. Elton as a social climber who will never marry without hope of advancement—a prediction proved true as Mr. Elton proposes marriage not to Harriet but to Emma. Rejecting him outright, Emma suggests he turn his attentions to Harriet instead. Humiliated, Mr. Elton flees Highbury, only to return with his well-to-do bride in hand.

The arrival of Frank Churchill, Mr. Weston’s estranged son, further disrupts Emma’s comfortable world. As she is ensnared by Mr. Churchill’s flirtation, Emma watches Harriet fall head over heels for Mr. Knightley and only now begins to realize that she, in fact, might be quite clueless about affairs of the heart, after all.

AUSTEN’S MASTERPIECE

In 1815 Jane Austen’s fourth novel, Emma, followed close on the heels of Sense and Sensibility (1811), Pride and Prejudice (1813), and Mansfield Park (1814), and was likewise published anonymously. To protect her reputation, Austen published Emma as written “by the author of Pride and Prejudice.” Only Austen’s family knew of her published identity, and they carefully preserved her anonymity until her death in 1817.

For many readers, their first encounter with the author is Pride and Prejudice. Yet most critics and scholars agree that Emma is Austen’s true masterpiece. Austen’s Emma has inspired countless retellings, including Amy Heckerling’s 1995 teen movie mega-hit Clueless, a 1996 film version starring Gwyneth Paltrow in the eponymous role, and, more recently, Paul Gordon’s musical adaptation. A new film adaptation, directed by Autumn de Wilde, is scheduled for release this winter. Scholars argue Jane Austen was at the height of her powers when she wrote Emma, the last of her works published during her lifetime.

Winter 2020 | Emma
And yet the sentence enables us to see our heroine from a little distance too. Such luck as Emma’s is not something that others always (to echo Austen) “much like.” It can smack of smugness; it can produce envy as readily as approbation. By strategic rifts in the gorgeous fabric of the prose, Austen hints at problems inherent in Emma’s self-perception. Why, for example, do the heroine’s gifts only “seem” to constitute the “best blessings” of existence? (Might there be better ones?) Since this is only the book’s first sentence, we can subliminally surmise that Emma will not continue long “with very little to distress or vex her.” Vexation, we intuit, may prove to be the plot’s whole point. In a few swift brushstrokes, Austen shows us her heroine from the inside and the outside; she sketches Emma’s confidence, and calls it into question.

That question crops up throughout the story as Emma, working again and again from an unruffled confidence in her own prerogatives, powers, and perceptions, strives to bring about changes in the lives of others, which she is all too certain will redound to their benefit. Steadily convinced of her own rightness, she nonetheless gets things wrong. In Emma, Austen embodies some of the dangers we have recently come to classify under the term “privilege”: the ways in which a plethora of good luck can render its possessor clueless as to the needs, desires, and vulnerabilities of the people s/he moves among.

Shakespeare, whose plays Austen knew deeply, often chooses to track this cluelessness to its cruel conclusions. In King Lear, Coriolanus, The Winter’s Tale, and elsewhere, his lead characters, self-enamored in their self-delusion, ruin lives and deal out death. In Measure for Measure, the playwright manages to map the problem in a single line, when his heroine Isabella, freshly appalled at the hypocrisy of the powerful, muses on the toxic propensity of human beings to misgauge their own wisdom. We are, she says, “most ignorant of what [we’re] most assured”: most certain about those things we least understand. And in our obliviousness, she contends, we do each other harm so drastic that it might “make the angels weep.”
In Emma, by contrast, Austen (and Gordon) opt to make us humans laugh, to swerve from potential Shakespearean tragedy toward something much sweeter. How does this shift come about? After all, Emma’s preposterously self-assured interventions cause real pain, and part of Emma’s power consists in making us see that pain, and feel it, even when our heroine does not.

We identify with Austen’s heroine because, willy-nilly and error-prone, we resemble her.

Still (spoiler alert!), in Austen’s comedy of unforced errors, Emma’s energetic cluelessness does no lasting harm. “This time” (to borrow Stephen Sondheim’s deathlessly straightforward definition of comedy) “it all comes out all right.”

En route to that cheering outcome, Austen cultivates a striking three-way resonance among the author, her heroine, and her audience—an echo chamber of identifications entirely appropriate to Shakespeare’s theater, and to Chicago’s. When Austen predicted that no one but herself would much like her heroine, she was both confident and incorrect. In that respect she actually resembled that heroine, who repeatedly travels the same trajectory of certainty and error throughout the book. And both of them, it’s no great stretch to suggest, resemble us. As we snuggle into our reading chair or slide into our theater seat, we are most likely caught somewhere in the same crossplay. Which of our currently most assured opinions and choices may soon unravel? By definition, we cannot guess.

In Emma then, on page or stage, like calls to like. We identify with Austen’s heroine because, willy-nilly and error-prone, we resemble her. At the same time (a bonus) Austen gives us a chance to see her more clearly than perhaps, at any given moment, we see ourselves. And besides, Emma in the end manages to make self-recognition seem at once painful, worthwhile, comic, luminous, and prosperous.

What’s not to like?
