Dear Friends,

Welcome to Chicago Shakespeare Theater. We are thrilled to have you with us as we open our 2013/14 season with Cyrano de Bergerac. This homage to poetry, love and panache is an adventurous tale illustrating how language and wit can define a man beyond his physical appearance. Under the exquisite direction of Penny Metropulos, actor Harry Groener returns to CST’s stage in the play’s title role, thus reuniting the dynamic (and Jeff Award-winning) duo behind the 2011 production of The Madness of George III. All told, it will take an ensemble of twenty-five actors and musicians to realize this epic theatrical journey today. We hope you enjoy the show!

As Chicago’s home for Shakespeare, CST is not only dedicated to producing extraordinary productions reflective of the Bard’s genius like Cyrano de Bergerac. Concurrent to the run of this play, our nationally recognized education programs will provide professional development workshops for English teachers and unite an ensemble of educators and students from a number of under-served Chicago Public Schools to create an abridged production of Othello—performed on this very stage, November 1–2. Fulfilling CST’s role as Chicago’s cultural ambassador, the fall World’s Stage Series will import the innovative play The Table by UK-based collective Blind Summit, as we also export our production of Othello: The Remix to a return engagement in London. (Since premiering at Shakespeare’s Globe in 2012, the production has toured to Germany, Scotland and South Korea.)

CST is proud to serve as a global theater reflective of the world-class city of Chicago. Thank you for your support of our work on stage, in the community and across the world!
We understand where a single ticket can take you.

American Airlines is a proud sponsor of Chicago Shakespeare Theater.
Chicago Shakespeare Theater (CST) believes that Shakespeare speaks to everyone. A global theatrical force, CST is known for vibrant productions that reflect Shakespeare's genius for storytelling, language and empathy for the human condition. We have evolved into a dynamic company, producing award-winning plays at our home on Navy Pier, throughout Chicago's schools and neighborhoods, and on stages around the world. We serve as a partner in literacy to Chicago Public Schools, working alongside English teachers to help struggling readers connect with Shakespeare in the classroom, and bringing his text to life on stage for 40,000 students every year. And each summer, 17,000 families and audience members of all ages welcome our free Chicago Shakespeare in the Parks into their neighborhoods across the far north, west and south sides of the city. Reflecting the global city we call home, CST is the leading producer of international work in Chicago and has toured our own plays abroad to Africa, Asia, Australia and Europe.

The Theater's tradition of excellence and civic leadership has been honored with numerous national and international awards, including the Regional Theater Tony Award, three Laurence Olivier Awards, and seventy total Joseph Jefferson Awards. CST was the 2012 recipient of the Folger Shakespeare Library's national Shakespeare Steward Award for our innovative teaching of Shakespeare in American classrooms. Among its many international engagements, CST participated in the Royal Shakespeare Company's 2006 Complete Works Festival and was selected to represent North America at the Globe to Globe festival as part of London's 2012 Cultural Olympiad.
In September, the Joseph Jefferson Award Committee honored Chicago Shakespeare Theater with nineteen nominations for productions throughout its 2012/13 Season—the most nominations received by any theater company this year. CST is grateful to have the ambitious creative vision and hard work of its artists acknowledged, proudly continuing the tradition of excellence that has propelled this theater to become a leading Chicago institution. CST artists, supporters, staff and audience alike congratulate the nominees from Sunday in the Park with George, The School for Lies, Julius Caesar, Henry VIII and Othello: The Remix. CST looks forward to joining its peers and fellow nominees to celebrate the exceptional artistry and extraordinary talent that make Chicago a world-class city, renowned for its theatrical richness and innovation. The 45th Annual Jeff Awards will be presented at Drury Lane Oakbrook on Monday, November 4.

Chicago Shakespeare believes that Shakespeare speaks to everyone. Driven by this commitment, the cast members of CST’s celebrated production, Othello: The Remix, performed for two special engagements this summer at the Cook County Department of Corrections for more than 600 inmates engaged in rehabilitation programs in preparation for release. This internationally traveled and acclaimed piece, created by Chicago artists The Q Brothers in collaboration with CST Creative Producer Rick Boynton, retells Shakespeare’s story of pride, betrayal and jealousy in the high-energy, streetwise vernacular of hip hop. Following each performance, the cast engaged with its audiences in Q & A, expanding on parallels between the 400-year-old play’s themes and their own personal journeys.
Recently CST made debut performances in South Africa and South Korea, introducing our unique brand of storytelling to audiences across the globe and forging partnerships with some of the world’s most esteemed arts festivals. In South Africa, Cadre, CST’s co-production with The Market Theatre of Johannesburg, traveled to Grahamstown as part of the National Arts Festival, the most expansive annual celebration of the arts on the African continent. In August, Othello: The Remix marked the Theater’s Asian debut at the Daejeon Arts and Culture Festival, outside of Seoul. Both productions subsequently toured to the UK, with Cadre at the 2013 Edinburgh Festival Fringe and Othello: The Remix at the Unicorn Theatre in London. This coming January, Othello: The Remix will play at the Sydney Festival in Australia, bringing CST’s global reach to four continents in the span of a single year.

Looking back at the first twenty-five years of Chicago Shakespeare’s rich history, CST Scholar-in-Residence Regina Buccola, Ph.D. collaborated with co-editor Peter Kanelos, Ph.D. in the newly published book, Chicago Shakespeare Theater: Suiting the Action to the Word. The collection of original essays and interviews includes, among many: Shakespearean scholar Wendy Wall; theater artist Simon Callow; national and international theater critics Terry Teachout and Michael Billington; and CST founders Artistic Director Barbara Gaines and Executive Director Criss Henderson. Chicago Shakespeare Theater: Suiting the Action to the Word examines the Theater’s international reputation—and the artistic vision and acumen behind it. The book is available at the CST Bookstall and through Northern Illinois University Press.
When she began the rehearsal process with her cast, Director Penny Metropulos sat down with Director of Education Marilyn Halperin to talk about her production of Cyrano de Bergerac.

Penny, we’re delighted to be welcoming you back to Chicago Shakespeare—and, with you, Harry Groener, who played your George III when you directed The Madness of George III here in 2011.

At first rehearsal when the entire CST staff and Cyrano cast gathers together in the room, I was so moved by listening to not only who everybody was but by what everybody does here—including our ‘wig knotters,’ who are constructing the 40 wigs for this production. Think about it. This is a centuries-old craft we’re still utilizing—and this theater fosters that level of art-making. I can’t imagine any director not being overwhelmingly grateful for being asked to work on Cyrano de Bergerac. But it’s a very large show, and it takes a theater like Chicago Shakespeare to be able to produce a play like this.

Rostand’s decision to write this particular story where and when he did was surprising, wasn’t it? What made it so?

Rostand wrote this play when he was twenty-nine years old. He wrote it in the late nineteenth century, when naturalism and realism absorbed the great playwrights of the time, notably, Ibsen, Shaw and Strindberg, among so many... others. The writers of the day were saying, Let’s look at the underbelly because things are not pretty. Things are not romantic. They are gritty and nasty and ugly. But none of us can do that twenty-four hours a day, every day of our lives. We need to be reminded of grace and beauty, and that’s what Rostand does.

You chose to work with the translation by Anthony Burgess. Talk to us about Burgess’s ‘presence’ in this piece.

Some people go to the theater because they need their hearts filled.

Anthony Burgess is best known for his Clockwork Orange, and some of our audience will know him, too, for his Shakespeare scholarship. Working on this man’s translation and adaptation, you come to understand how his own genius met the genius of Rostand and together created something quite extraordinary. The fact that Burgess wrote two different translations of this same play over the years is indicative of just how rich the play is and how it affected him, as a writer and a poet. We think we know the play, but then when it is revealed in its entirety you see that it’s much deeper, much richer.

Is that the reason for its lasting power—and why audiences for well over a century have embraced it?

It’s interesting to me that the story starts in a theater, because Cyrano’s onstage audience enters the hall looking for the same thing we all look for when we go to the theater. Peter Brook calls it having this ‘interest.’ Interests vary. Some go to the theater to see a star. Some go because they want to be seen. Some people go because they want to say they’ve been to the theater. Some go because they’ve read about the production somewhere. Some people go to the theater because they need their hearts filled. They want to laugh, they need to forget. This is our audience and this is the audience that walks into that imaginary onstage theater to see a famous actor of their day. The real theater, though, occurs when Cyrano enters. When he walks in the door, the truth walks in—and when truth walks in the door, it’s thrilling, it’s witty, it’s brilliantly spoken, and it goes right to the heart of the matter. That’s what that audience was looking for and they got it. I think a play like Cyrano de Bergerac meets that need so beautifully, and that’s one of the reasons I love it. I think we need it to lighten our dark world in a joyful way.

What have you come to appreciate about this character at his core?

To me, one of the definitions of panache is the joy of the pursuit of the ideal. To me, that is the reason that this story is not a tragedy, though its hero dies. That sense of joy in his pursuit of the ideal is present all the way to the moment of his death. When we talk about seeking the ideal, it is the essence of who we are as human beings.

It’s the most serious question we can ask ourselves. It is what defines our character and defines our life. Do I, or any of us, do this daily? No, of course not, but that’s the reason we have and need heroes in literature. To help remind us. Cyrano says, ‘I cannot be successful without excess.’ He has this tenacious desire to not be distracted from the ideals that he’s pursuing. That’s what a real hero is, right? Someone relentlessly undistracted by this pursuit. But Cyrano is also a human being. What is he distracted by? His vanity—that he believes he can never be truly loved because of the way he looks. He is human, and that’s why we are so moved by him. ‘These are my enemies,’ he says as he dies: vanity, pride, stupidity, ignorance. He has fought his enemies on the outside, and his enemies on the inside. I think we all have a part of Cyrano in us.

You said that watching the recent coverage of the 1963 March on Washington resonated profoundly with you as you were in rehearsal. Can you talk about the connection in your mind?

Martin Luther King, Jr. didn’t know at the beginning who would join him, that it would be students first in Birmingham and soon throughout the country who entered the civil rights movement. Young people hold the belief that there is something better. Cyrano holds in his mature, experienced self, this seventeen-year-old idealism. In one of her essays, Annie Dillard talks about ‘the long thought’ and how we have strayed from our ability to have the long thought because we’re so distracted by our lives. Someone like Martin Luther King, Jr. or like Cyrano has the long thought.

THE STORY

Renowned throughout France for his unrivaled swordplay, wordplay, and nose, Cyrano de Bergerac is the man on everyone’s mind as they anticipate the curtain rising on this evening's drama. Will Cyrano absent himself as Montfleury, the actor he has banned from performing here, takes the stage? No—and nor will he stand by as a crowd of ruffians intend to ambush his friend Lignière later that night.

The next morning it is Cyrano who now awaits the arrival of one person: his cousin, Roxane, whom he has loved in silence because of his certainty that she, nor any woman, can love him. Roxane confides that it is Christian, a new cadet in Cyrano’s regiment, with whom she has fallen in love. She asks her cousin to look out for his welfare, and Cyrano agrees. And when Christian fears that he cannot court a beautiful young woman with the intellect of Roxane, Cyrano offers himself up once more: together, they create the perfect lover, inside and out. Through Cyrano’s exquisite words, Roxane falls ever more deeply in love. And as Cyrano diverts the attention of the powerful Count de Guiche, another suitor to Roxane with less noble intentions, she and Christian are secretly wed.

Newly promoted as commander of Cyrano and Christian’s Gascon regiment, the enraged de Guiche sends their troop directly into harm’s way as the French face the Spanish enemy at the Battle of Arras. Roxane follows her love to the front line, and there the tide of events is forever altered.

EDMOND ROSTAND

Cyrano has always eclipsed the artist who imagined him, and indeed it was not until almost a century after the playwright’s death that a complete Rostand biography was available in English. The son of a well-to-do and cultured family, Rostand was born in Marseille in 1868. Upon completing his law degree, he fully dedicated himself to creative work. His first notable piece, Les Romanesques, a variation on the themes of Romeo and Juliet, was produced in 1894. The most significant event of Rostand’s life came to pass just a few years later with the writing and production of Cyrano de Bergerac. When the play opened in 1897, the author was twenty-nine years old. Practically overnight, the young Frenchman found his name included on lists of literature’s greats: Shakespeare, Hugo, Dante—and Rostand. The success of the work led to his 1901 election to the Académie française, its youngest member ever elected. But the burden of fame and his fragile physical constitution proved too taxing. The public’s expectations would outshine the more modest reality of Rostand’s subsequent works. Disappearing into a quiet retirement, he died of pneumonia at the age of fifty, a victim of the 1918 flu pandemic.

We hear Cyrano before we see him. He shouts in outrage from somewhere in the darkness of the auditorium, then swiftly makes his way onto the stage. Or rather, onto two: the twenty-first-century stage, and the seventeenth-century playhouse where Cyrano promptly shuts down the premiere of a play whose star he despises.

And then, prodigiously, supplants it. By the time this first scene is over, he will have performed such wonders of voice and body, word—and swordplay, as to provide his Parisian audience with much more than their money’s-worth. Nothing they’d come to see could possibly have proven as spellbinding as he.

The same holds true for us. The scene is an opening masterstroke in a play wholly focused on the elusive interplay between hearing and seeing, voices and bodies. Rostand will prove phenomenally adept in the wonders that theater can work with both.

The play’s well-known premise distributes these elements rather plainly, as a kind of quid pro quo: Cyrano, convinced of his own ugliness but achingly in love with his word-drunk cousin Roxane, helps the handsome, inarticulate Christian to woo and win her, in what both men initially perceive as a perfect fusion of voice and body: “If only,” laments Christian, “I had the words.” “I have the words,” Cyrano answers. “All I lack is looks ... You plus I equal one hero of the story books.” The play’s multiple amazements arise from the ways Rostand will melt this plain arithmetic into poetry, remaking it into a map, readily recognizable by every mortal watching, of the human propensities for passion, performance, and inhibiting self-scorn.

For we see from the start that Cyrano’s voice, and his body too, are layered things, compounded out of preternatural virtuosity (those words, that sword) and private pain. When Cyrano, informed by an idiot that his nose is big, proceeds to improvise the dazzling sequence of insults with which his hapless interlocutor might have assailed his problematic proboscis, we hear in the very prolificity of his wit—the creative energy devoted by his own fertile brain to the topic of his flawed body—the sorrow that his speech at once conceals and confesses: this thing hurts me; this thing haunts me. We hear the one thing that he strives to leave unvoiced.

Each successive scene in the play will ramp up this tension between hypnotic speech and agonized silence. Cyrano will put himself through a sequence of astonishing performances, each of which entails an ordeal of self-containment, as he chooses, again and again but for ever more pressing reasons, not to confess his love to his cousin.

We hear the one thing that he strives to leave unvoiced.

Only once, at the play’s deeply moving midpoint, does Rostand briefly release the tension between speech and silence, before ratcheting it up to new heights. At night, under Roxane’s balcony, Cyrano seizes the chance to speak in his own voice of his love for her; he can do so precisely because she continues to think she’s listening to Christian. (Lovers and a balcony: Cyrano reworks Shakespeare everywhere, in ways worth listening for.) At the play’s start, Cyrano speaks out of the darkness. But this time we see him (as Roxane does not), and we hear in his speech the heart-swelling fullness of self-revelation, freed by invisibility, unencumbered by the need for surrogation.

And then, with harsh immediacy, comes the play’s most sustained instance of speech as self-suppression. To distract a nobleman who would interfere with Roxane’s and Christian’s coupling, Cyrano must improvise a new role—as a garrulous, obstructive lunatic just fallen from the moon and intent on rising back again. (Another echo: Edgar feigning madness as poor Tom in King Lear.) And he must do this knowing all the while that he is indispensably helping to make possible the thing that he least wants to happen: the union of his beloved with another man.
“Your soul arose,” Roxane will later say to Christian, recollecting this pivotal night,
In perfume to my window, the true you
Made itself known in a voice.

She is speaking still to the wrong man, but she could not be more right.
Moments earlier, we heard Cyrano speak of his panache—the white plume he proudly wears in his hat—as his “visible soul.” (It is this metaphorical connotation of panache—as grace, virtuosity, heroic self-possession—that Rostand’s play permanently bequeathed to our language.)

Roxane’s words confirm what we already know: that Cyrano’s passionate voice is his plume’s audible equivalent, the medium in which his soul most lives. Its sound, rising in the night to the balcony where its speaker most longed to be (but where his body, unlike Romeo’s, could not follow), delivered his true soul, made him known though still unknown to his longed-for listener. Only at play’s end will Roxane complete the path from hearing to seeing that we traversed in its first moments, when our hero spoke in darkness en route to center stage. Having heard Cyrano’s voice for many years, Roxane at long last sees him whole.

In that final scene, rise and fall become all in all. Cyrano, visiting Roxane in early autumn, remarks that the leaves “fall well. With a sort of panache ... They go in grace, making their fall appear like flying.” A little later, he returns to the fantasy of flying to the moon—this time not as lunatic but as lifelong lover. In real life, Cyrano de Bergerac (1619–1655), poet, playwright, soldier, was also one of the first creators of science fiction; his novel L’Autre Monde (The Other World) recounted, as if autobiographically, his rocket voyage to the moon. Rostand deepens the lunar connection; Cyrano’s closing fantasy of flight becomes the play’s last manifestation of his visible, audible soul, as though the moon itself were the apt and final stage for his loquacious, silent, fabulously theatrical journey.

Members of the Shakespeare Society provide vital annual support to sustain Chicago Shakespeare Theater’s mission. The commitment of these steadfast individuals helped to build a home for Shakespeare in Chicago that has endured for the past quarter-century. We are deeply grateful for their extraordinary investment in the Theater’s guiding principles to serve as a cultural leader, citizen and ambassador for our city.

Thanks to the contributions of CST’s family of donors, we can continue to delight audiences in Chicago and around the world through our trademark approach to theater that is inspired by the spirit of Shakespeare. Annual donations offset the substantial expense of producing theater of uncompromising quality and ambition. In recognition of the enhanced level of support provided by our Bard Circle donors of $1,000 or more, CST provides exclusive privileges and behind-the-scenes access.

Reflects contributions received between July 1, 2012 to August 25, 2013.

CELEBRATE A SPECIAL PERSON OR OCCASION BY MAKING A GIFT TO CHICAGO SHAKESPEARE

Donations can be made in memory of a loved one or to commemorate a birthday, wedding or other special occasion. Donors and their honoree will be listed in CST’s production program in a special tribute section for an entire year after the gift is received.

Contact Melissa Collins in the Advancement Office at 312.595.5672 or mcollins@chicagoshakes.com or make your gift securely online at www.chicagoshakes.com/support.
Matching Gifts

By providing matching support, the following organizations are actively contributing to causes that improve the communities where their employees live and work. Chicago Shakespeare Theater salutes these employers for increasing the impact of donor support. Contact your employer today to find out more about their matching gift initiatives.
